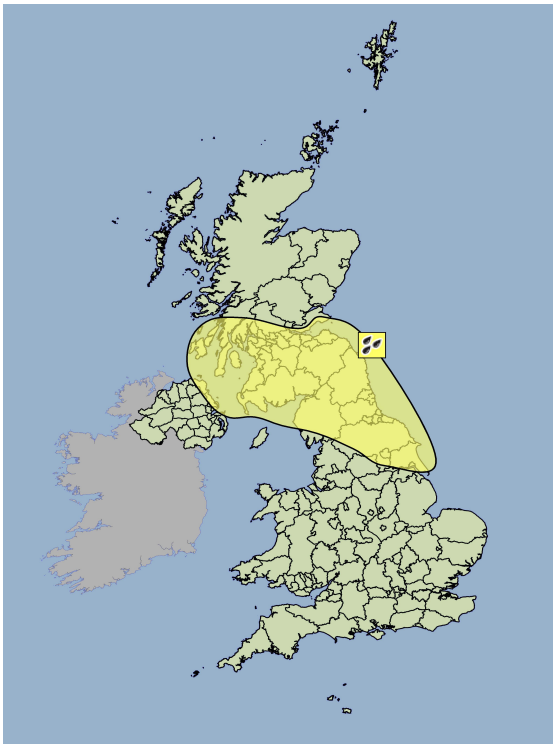
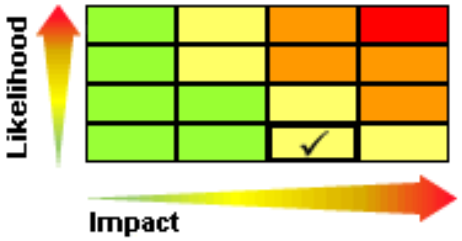
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Warm, humid air, originating from France and Spain, is moving northwards across the UK. This has generated a band of heavy, locally thundery, rain, which is moving steadily northwards. There is still the potential for some embedded intense downpours with localised flooding a possibility, although the risk of this in any one place is low. This is expected to be the last update to this warning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 16:30 on Sat, 07th Jun 2014 until 18:00 on Sat, 07th Jun 2014

Heavy rain, locally thundery, will continue to move northwards across the UK over the next few hours.

The public should be aware of the potential for localised flooding.

This is a further update to the warning to confine the yellow area to northern England, southern Scotland and the northeast of Northern Ireland. Clearer weather will follow from the south this evening, although isolated thundery showers will still affect some areas.
